

"When the Invisible Hand Rocks the Cradle"

The Authors

Dr Alison Blaiklock is a public health physician and an Honorary Research Fellow at Massey University Albany. She chairs Action for Children and Youth Aotearoa, the coalition of non-governmental organisations that is preparing a report about the situation of children and young people in New Zealand for the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child. She also works part-time for the Auckland Regional Public Health Service.

Dr Cindy Kiro is a senior lecturer at Massey University Albany who has worked in the health sector over many years, and worked for Maori development, the environment and social justice in areas such as advocating for children and young people and working against family violence

Dr Michael Belgrave is a historian teaching social policy at Massey University's Albany Campus. He was research manager for the Waitangi Tribunal and is a leader of a research team working on behalf of claimants. He has also working on social policy and social service evaluation and led the recently completed evaluation of the social workers in schools initiative.

Dr Will Low studied economics, completing a BA and an MA at the University of British Columbia and a PhD at the London School of Economics. He has a long-standing interest in social issues and has worked with a number of not-for-profit and community organizations. Currently, Will teaches at the University of Auckland Business School where he specializes in Business and Society.

Eileen Davenport has worked for over 15 years in community and social development. Born and educated in the UK, she has also lived and worked in Australia, Canada and New Zealand. Currently she is working as an independent social impact assessment and evaluation specialist in New Zealand and overseas in Cambodia, Lao, Vietnam, India and several Pacific island countries.

Dr Ian Hassall is a children's advocate and chairs the lobby group Children's Agenda. He helped develop the government's June 2002 'Agenda for Children' and the independent report, 'Making it Happen' aimed at hastening its implementation. He works at the Institute of Public Policy and the Domestic Violence Centre in Auckland. He was New Zealand's first Commissioner for Children.